“ Oh Doug. We shared so many times (good and bad).
Those memories will stay with me forever.

From troublemaking teenagers to joining the Navy together, then getting in some trouble and separating for a period of time, I never stopped caring about you.

I remember the last conversation we had online ... very recently we were talking about the grace of God. You told me "I know he has plans for me! I just have to get out of his way and let him take over completely!. I truly believe that people will see a different me from now on!!! after I get home, I will get in touch and maybe we can go to church and praise God together!!!"

That gives me comfort... knowing that you turned towards Him, erasing the sins WE participated in together, and all the other ones in our own separate lives.

I am sorry I didnt make it to visit you while you were recovering from surgery. I was planning to this week, but out of the blue, your sister contacted me explaining you had taken a turn for the worse and transferred to the hospital. The lesson for me is to never put off the important things/people in your life. So, I am stuck with saying goodbye from here... through Jesus... knowing will get the message. Love you.
